- C(6) 3. Coal mining can be dangerous because of flooding, gas leaks, and stale air. One danger is that without good drainage, some mines deep under the surface of the earth have water flooding problems. Another danger is methane gas, which comes from rotten vegetable matter. A further danger is that mines are often filled with "blackdamp," carbon dioxide with little oxygen in it. Because people need to breathe oxygen to live, the miners cannot survive in these mines.
